RE: Toro 4010D Replacement
DATE: February 2026

SUMMARY:

Our 2016 Toro Groundsmaster 4000D (Unit 1364) is scheduled for replacement in 2026 per the fleet replacement plan. This unit has accumulated 4,622 operating hours over 10 years of service and has been used extensively for both mowing and snow removal. Given its usage and age, it is the right time to retire the unit from fleet service and send it to auction. There are no comparable machines currently found in recent online auctions searches. However, after reviewing auction data it shows a older 4000D model selling for approximately $9,550 with no Cab or snow implement. While our machine has high hours and use, it is equipped with both a snow cab and a snow broom, which add value. Based on this, we anticipate a higher sale price, with an estimated value range of $10,000.

The existing 4000D model no longer supports a cab option. Its replacement, the Toro Groundsmaster 4010D, offers a factory year-round cab that improves operator safety, provides air conditioning, and supports snow removal implements. The year-round cab also eliminates the labor required on the 4000D model to install and remove when converting the machine for winter operations.

A replacement quote has been obtained from Reinders, our long-standing Toro dealer, through cooperative purchasing (Sourcewell #112624-TTC / Omnia #2023261). The proposed machine will be used for mowing during the growing season and equipped with a snow broom for winter snow removal. Estimated delivery is Late March-April 2026.

Comparable equipment was reviewed from other manufacturers. Jacobsen offers a similar turf mower with snow conversion capability; however, the Cooperative purchasing quote is $9,029.93 higher than the Toro option. John Deere offers a mower with snow conversion capability, but it is a single deck 72inch and is not a comparable machine.

Based on functionality, operator safety, cost, and compatibility with existing fleet operations, the Toro Groundsmaster 4010D is the most suitable replacement.
